

The Promise of Christmas

God said that His Son would be gentle and mild;
He told us a virgin would mother the child,
That Bethlehem Judah was where He would come,
But Nazarath was to be where He was from.

He said He'd be holy and righteous and just,
The kind of a man that the world could trust;
And though by his lineage He should be their king,
He'd hum-bl-y serve them in thing after thing.

He said they'd despise all the good He had done,
Rejecting the fact that He came as God's son;
And He'd be acquainted with sorrow and grief,
Because of their blindness and lack of belief.

God said that He would not dispute their demands,
Although they would kill Him by piercing His hands;
But He'd put our sins on our Savior's account,
And His blood would cover the total amount.

And that's how it happened, God went all the way;
He sent us His Son on that first Christmas day;
He came through the door that God said that He would,
And did all the things that the Son of God should.

He showed by His life He was just what God said
By healing the sick and by raising the dead,
And sharing their heartaches and feeling their pain;
But they just accused Him of being insane.

He went to the cross with a dignified grace
And paid for our sins when He died in our place,
So God would be just when He said we'd receive
Forgiveness from sins if we'd only believe.

God said what He'd do, and He did what He said,
So we could be sure that we are not misled
In putting our trust in what Jesus has done
On Calvary's cross, where God gave us His Son.
